SIGN LANGUAGE

The ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle believed that people could learn only by hearing spoken words. In the 18th century, the invention of sign language changed people's opinions. Abbé Charles Michel L'Epée opened the first school for deaf people in Paris in the 1750s. He created a language of signs that became known as Old French Sign Language, and it spread throughout Europe as more and more schools opened.

Sign language is the system of signs and gestures that deaf people use to communicate. Today, almost every country has its own sign language. For example in the UK, there is BSL (British Sign Language) and in the USA, ASL (American Sign Language). However, sign languages are very different from spoken languages.

They have different grammar and vocabulary. Also, you can even express two or more signs at the same time.

So, even though British and American people speak English, BSL and ASL aren't the same at all. However, in other countries things are different. South Africa has 11 official spoken languages but only one sign language. There is an international sign language called Gestuno, but they only use it at international deaf events, such as the Deaflympics — the Olympics for the deaf.

Hey John,
How's it going? Hope you're well. I'm great! (1) On Tuesday, we went on a school trip (2) to Kew Gardens. It was an extraordinary experience. The place is enormous and there are thousands of plant species there! We were there (3) for over four hours, but I feel like there is still a lot to see and learn. There was a guide with us (4) our visit. He knew a lot of things about each plant. It was cool! We saw many beautiful flowers and trees, but we also saw some very strange ones as we were walking (5) the place. My favourite was the 'Fly Trap', which eats mostly insects and spiders. Cool, right? It's the one (6) the pictures I've sent you. Anyway, I'm going again (7) at the weekend. How about coming along? Let me know. Bye for now, George
